THE GRADUATION EXERCISES.

The Class of 1892 and Their Companions Furnish An Excellent Program.

The Baptist church auditorium was filled to its capacity last Friday evening with an audience that was highly entertained. The program was a varied one, and meritorious both as a whole and in detail. The musical numbers good and recitations of Misses Owen and Douglas well chosen and delivered. The debate upon whether or not Chinese immigration will injure our civilization was a surprise to the listeners. The arguments presented by George Reed for the exclusion of the Chinese were by no means a refutation of older speaker's thoughts. His paper was a logical one for his youthful mind to evolve and as he had decidedly the best side of the case for popular favor the audience enjoyed it thoroughly. But granting Master Reed full credit for his paper he was fully matched on the argument by Ernest Mickeljohn, who read a paper opposed to the restriction of Chinese which would have done credit to many of the old heads in the audience. With the negative and non-sympathetic side of the question he impressed his hearers forcibly and proved himself an extraordinarily good reasoner for one of his years. We give our readers the benefit of the graduation papers complete herewith:

Earth's Battlefield.

BY MISS MAY McDONALD.

Every great battle excites admiration. Upon every field cluster sacred memories—memories of deeds of daring, of treasures wasted, of victories won, and of fallen heroes. The battlefield has been in all ages the inspiration of the poet's song. Byron sings of Waterloo; the ballads of ancient times had for their subjects battles recounting heroic deeds. Not only the poet, but humanity itself receives from these new inspirations for life's conflict. Battlefields are held in dear remembrance, not only from the standpoint of national pride but from purer motives, for the remembrance of those whose lives were given in defence of home and country. Every epoch in history is marked by some great battle. Battle fields are milestones in history; they mark the rise and fall of nations in letters of blood. Of the battles of ancient times probably those of Marathon and Thermopylae were the most noted. Greece at this time was divided into separate provinces, each one jealous of the other and ready to take advantage of any weakness of the other for its own advancement. Aristides the Just was exiled; he had fallen into disgrace by his vain endeavor to raise the people to a higher morality. Darius of Persia had determined to extend his conquests over Greece, and to carry out this design, raised an immense army and marched against Greece. The Greeks realizing their danger united against their powerful foe. They met on the plains of Marathon, a few against many. To the astonishment of all the Persians were completely overcome. This battle is justly famous on account of its historical results. Had the Athenians been defeated nothing could have prevented them from falling under the rule of the Persian king and sinking into an obscure province instead of occupying the position, the seat of learning and refinement which they soon did. In Thermopylae we have an example of heroic bravery. Xerxes wishing to carry out the plans of his father Darius, again massed an immense army purposing to conquer the Greeks. All know the story of the narrow pass between the mountains and sea, held by the patriot Greeks. The brave Leonidas learning that a traitor had disclosed a secret passage by which to avoid the pass sent back all but his faithful; they stood before the enemy until all but one fell. This story of the little Spartan band will descend to the latest ages in song and history. The Persians in their confidence brought marble to commemorate the victory which they were sure they would gain. But fate ordered otherwise and the Greeks in derision caused Phidias the great sculptor, to carve from it a statue of Nemesis, the Goddess of Vengeance which they set on the field of Marathon.

The battle of Waterloo in its effect is one of the most important of modern times. Napoleon emerged from his retirement on the Isle of Elba, and by the magic spell of his name called together a large army of his old soldiers with whom he marched to Paris. The king fled at his approach and he looked forward to a brilliant campaign but was doomed to disappointment. The effect of the battle was exceedingly disastrous to Napoleon.

The capitol was again occupied by foreign troops and stripped of the treasures of art with which the great general had adorned it. The Legislature demanded a second abdication, and Napoleon was ordered to embark immediately for a foreign land; and Europe was saved from a universal monarchy.

Wars are as a general thing unnecessary. They benefit a few while the majority bear the suffering and loss. Wars of subjugations are prompted by ambition either for wealth or power, and are uniformly attended by cruelty. That of the Revolution is an example of a necessary war; if we could imagine ourselves placed backward two and one half centuries, and see the little band of Pilgrims on the English shore persecuted for their religious belief and denied the right to worship God in their own way, we should have a better idea of the faith, which gave them strength to leave their own home and settle in a far distant wilderness.

We can almost imagine we can see their grand old faces as they looked to God for direction in their trials. Although they gave their sons and hard earned treasures to the mother country without recompense, yet in spite of these exactions their love never failed. It was only after repeated acts of oppression that they were awakened to a sense of their rights. It was only when appeal after appeal was met by derision and they saw that the interest felt for them by the mother country was only for her own glory, and that they were fast becoming a nation of slaves, that they dared for a moment rebel against her unjust demands. Thus was brought on the war of the Revolution and its effect we see in this broad and glorious land—the land of the free and the home of the brave. We find another example of a necessary war, as one occurred in our own land but a few years since in which thousands of men and millions of money were poured out in defense of liberty's principles. The principal cause of the Civil war was that fearful crime against God and man "slavery." It was a problem which the founders of the Constitution endeavored to solve but failed. When the leaders of oppression dared to raise their hand to sever the bond, which united this country in one grand union a thrill of horror and indignation extended to every patriot heart. After the lapse of years in reading over the history of the war we find that the battles of Vicksburg and Gettysburg were the most decisive in their results; as one gave us the control of the Mississippi; and the effect of the other was to prevent any further invasion of the north. Slowly but surely one after another their strong bulwarks were broken up and peace was gained. But who can imagine the cost, not merely in treasure but in the loss of those brave boys in blue now sleeping in southern graves.

"Sleeping to awaken in this dreary world no more,
Sleeping for their true loved country,
Sleeping for the flag they bore."

The battles of earth are not all fought on the field of carnage amidst the booming of cannon, the rattle of musketry and the silent forms of the dead. Far back in the cycle of time before God in His infinite goodness sent us the light of His word and His beloved son to die for us, we read of the struggles of Plato, Aristotle and Socrates that purity and justice might be the governing principles with their countrymen. Although they met with defeat, yet they never wavered and the earth is better for their efforts. Milton in his blindness, Baymum in his cell are familiar examples of these. From the dreary battlefields of these illustrious souls come principles that are eternal and revelations which bless humanity.

Our own Lincoln is a bright example of victory. From the depth of ignorance and poverty he rose to a position equalled only by the immortal Washington, retaining throughout life a simplicity of manner and kindhearted thoughtfulness for all about him.

We find sad examples of those who have failed to win for themselves a victory over their own selfish ambition. We have only to look at Arnold to see the ruin wrought by one false step. Aron Burr stood side by side with the brightest statesmen in our land but in an evil moment he listened to the voice of the siren which told him of a brilliant future in which he might rule as king if he would by one bold stroke sever from the union the fertile valley of the Mississippi. He escaped punishment only through the stupidity and mystery which enveloped his plans. He was worsted in the battle for power and his remains lie in a neglected grave with no stone to tell that one of earth's gifted sons is the occupant.

Edgar A. Poe is another example of failure in life's conflict. He was endowed with talents of a high order but he fell a victim to the demon of intemperance. In looking over the history of battlefields, both moral and physical, we find three qualifications ignored, and these were wisdom, foresight and prudence. By the aid of these three virtues many conflicts could have been avoided.

The readiness of a nation to engage in war decreases as knowledge increases and we trust that the time may come when men will feel that "He who ruleth His spirit is greater than he who taketh a city."

The Columbian Exposition.

BY MISS JENNIE BARNES.

A little over a hundred years ago, our Republic took its position among the nations of the earth. The brief history of its rapid and phenomenal growth I will not repeat—it is familiar to us all. We are proud of its past, and have an abiding faith in its future.

Since the time of its independence at least, its development in all the different departments of human effort has been a series of improvements that have gained a momentum at each successive step, until the present age of steam and electricity has left but one unexplored field to inventors and we look daily for the announcement that some genius has solved the problem of aerial navigation. But few surprises are left as an inheritance to this generation, for we have learned to expect anything that comes within the range of possibilities. Progress is the nation's motto—"Progress" is painted on the rocks and written on every landscape, and our advancing line of civilization keeps pace with the increase of population.

But the history of this Republic does not begin with the revolution. Back in the past when goblins and hideous dragons stood ready to devour the superstitious sailor that ventured upon the unknown sea, when terrific storms and demons of darkness guarded the western line of the mariner's ventures, was the first great triumph that began the conflict that has conquered inch by inch the whole area of this broad territory.

It was a beautiful morning August 3, 1492, just before sunrise, when, amid the gloomy forebodings of the timid sailors and the lamentations of their friends, Columbus set forth upon that memorable voyage that was to prove the truth of his despised theories and realize the dream of his life. I need not relate the experiences of that dismal voyage, nor dwell upon the sad story of his wrongs. Since the highway of the politician does not traverse the fields of genius, how could we expect the kings and courts of those times to leave their intrigues and selfish ambitions to listen to the wild dreams of an adventurer? None but a woman could pause to listen to the Gospel of a new revelation, for read the divine commission in the face of the earnest and persistent commander whose eye had seen the cloud and pillar of fire in the western sky, and whose heart was laboring under the stress of prophecy! But the ungrateful country that he so exalted and enriched, jealous of his fame and success, plotted against him when alive and allowed him to die in poverty and neglect; for the queen, his patroness, was dead and his fortunes were in the hands of avaricious men. At one time his name was hardly known. The house where he was born, a few scraps of manuscript, are about all there is left of Columbus. But he has left behind him a name in history, a description of his great discovery, and a character for benevolence and virtue that stands out in bold relief against those men who robbed him of his well earned riches. The world has waited long to reach a condition that enables it to do full justice to his memory.

On October 12, just four hundred years after Columbus from the Pinta saw the first dim outline of the new continent, representatives from the whole civilized world will meet to dedicate in his honor the vast buildings of the "Columbian Exposition." The World's Fair of '92 is the last of these series of commemorative events in our history, and its magnitude and magnificence will exceed anything ever before attempted. The original plan has been greatly enlarged to accommodate the prospective demands. More buildings and new features have been added until Congress is asked to double the first millions of appropriations.

One building alone—that of Manufactures and Liberal Arts, including its interior galleries—will have a floor space of about forty acres, and its ground area would accommodate three such buildings as St. Peter's at Rome, the largest church edifice in the world, and the span of its arched roof covers the largest space ever attempted by an architect. Even this enormous total of enclosed room it is feared will be scarcely sufficient to accommodate the demands already made by the exhibitors in this one department.

I cannot give the briefest description of all the different buildings. The special features and exhibits of the states and territories and countries from all parts of the globe, to say nothing of the accommodations for the business management, the vast provisions for entertainment, the multitudes, towers, parks, statuary, bronzes, beautiful designs in architecture, lagoons and the many novelties intended to amuse the people or ornament its spacious grounds—certainly this will present the greatest aggregation of the products of industry and the most complete panorama of the latest achievements of mankind in every branch of study, art, invention and manufacture the world has ever known.

Three buildings deserve more than a passing glance. One that belongs to the state of Wisconsin will contain the gigantic engine made in Milwaukee that drives the ponderous machinery with a capacity of between three and four thousand horse-power exceeding by nearly or quite three times that of the famous Corliss engine that formed the prominent feature of the Centennial at Philadelphia in '76. A saw mill with all its equipments, the block of granite from Lake Superior—the largest monolith of a single stone ever quarried. The Woman's Building, designed, ornamented and managed exclusively by women, a woman's ideal of home in all its departments; not a piece of bric-a-brac or a statue that adorns the rooms, or picture that adorns the walls, that is not a product of the hand or brain of woman. And lastly, the Electric Hall containing all there is known in electrical science.

To visit this exhibit will be the event of a life time and no one can afford to miss the opportunity. The young student will gain some idea of the conditions that confront him as he emerges from the class-room to prepare for the active duties of life in a country whose natural resources are not half developed, and which still draws the best material from the old world. For the Goddess of Liberty has just lifted her torch above the waters of the stormy Atlantic. Borne upon its turbulent bosom are the descendants of the hardy races that determined the destiny of England. Transplanted to a land that affords still better opportunities and conditions, the greatness of our future is fully assured.

But the crowning triumph of the 19th century is the era of peace. A universal peace has made possible this fraternal union of competing interests. The earth is vexed no more with the tread of contending armies. The next Prince that would occupy the throne of England must ask consent of the House of Commons. The young Kaiser has become frantic over the waning prestige of his illustrious house, and is now playing the principal part in the "Comedy of Departing Royalty." The people are no longer awed into submission, for the Samson of labor has shaken his locks, and is feeling after the pillars of his military prison. Soon the temple of Jannus will be closed forever, and the surplus energies of brute force will be utilized in the workshops of industry.

Edison sits in the seat of Mars, and space is traversed upon the lightning's wing. The solitudes are enlivened by the sweet music of speech, and called back to life are the forgotten voices of the dead. These are thy victories, oh, peace! Let the earth bring forth her fruits in gladness; in thy hands are the choicest gifts of the gods. Under the patronage of thy universal dominion the chosen city of this great Republic spreads a banquet to the nations in honor of the fearless navigator whose faith for eighteen years endured the delays of courts and the scoffs of fools, and who, through the long centuries, has waited in silence for the tardy world to do justice to his memory!

The Anchor of the Republic.

BY MISS MAY B. STEVENS.

The Anchor of this, the greatest of all Republics is education. Its mighty bulwark sink into the depths of our national organism. Every fiber of the cable that holds this mighty ship of state securely to its moorings is twisted into a whole by the determined purpose of its people to be first in perpetuating and strengthening the principles that secure to us the greatest place among nations.

Education is of two kinds; the moral and religious forming one, and the intellectual the other. The moral and religious education commences in early childhood and under proper training becomes enthroned forever in the life and character of the coming man. The principles of humanity, equity and justice taken from the Bible standpoint being once established, the corner stone of the structure that may rise to unlimited proportions is securely laid.

The man, who thus in early life forms this character is ready to enter into the intellectual field prepared to reap honors such as the world of great men may covet. A nation whose legislators are governed by these principles has a certain future, and will make a more glorious and prosperous record than any known to the history of the past.

The founders of this Republic exercised wisdom and foresight in providing for and maintaining institutions of learning that could be reached and enjoyed by all classes of people, and made it possible for the humblest citizen to gain the highest place and honors known to our nation's catalogue of fame. The legislation of our national government and of the states has been wise and liberal in its provisions for the support of public schools. Seeking out every corner of our progressing civilization; giving it power within itself to organize and become a part of the great system that forms the whole.

"The common school, oh! let its light Shine through our country's story;
Here lies her health, her wealth, her might;
Here rests her future glory!"

A common school system is indispensable to a free government and should be the pride of our nation. Within its fostering arms are cradled the intellects of our inventors, scientists, judges and statesmen. "We Must Educate" is a motto that is native born in the breasts of most Americans. It should be sounded from the pulpit, the press and every rostrum throughout our land. The reward of fidelity to this Goddess of Liberty and Power should be heralded so constantly that from the palace born to the street wail the inspiration should be caught and fanned into a flame. One boy, man, or statesman leads another in proportion to the amount of knowledge he has at command and the force he has to apply it as a power to promote his cause. And when the glittering prize head and first of all can be reached, what greater incentive can be offered to anyone to put forth his best efforts to master all branches of education. There are several means by which an education can be obtained. But the main one is the common school, which is supported by public money.

The poorer class of people would not be educated if these schools were not in existence. Thus the development of the country depends on the common schools. Education makes the world seem larger. It develops our faculties and broadens the intellectual horizon. The educated man is guided by principles. He is the man of broad and liberal views. Such a man is needed in the pulpit, in politics, in commerce, in our schools, and in the editor's office. The object of education is not to earn a living simply, but to live, nobly and powerfully. Man comes into the world the most helpless of creatures. A craving has been given him to hear a narrative. History and biography have no attractions for him. What then, shall we do for him? The simplest way is to educate him so he can read and understand literature of all kinds, and thus inform himself what has been learned and taught by other minds. From the common school the student enters into a larger field, the scope of which continues to increase and the end is no nearer than when he had mastered the alphabet. Like the pebble thrown into the ocean, his everwidening wave is said to have no limit.

The lover of plants pursues the study of botany, and is delighted with every opening flower, leaf, and stalk, finding in them a greater diversity of form, taste and use than in any other order of nature. The lover of history searches with increasing toil and care the records of all nations and languages for facts concerning the wonderful and ever-changing process of nature, the mighty achievements of man in war, peace, science and in invention, that he may know the better how to live and help to govern. The scientist collects in his laboratory the labor and product of his predecessors, then sits down in thoughtful mood and calls on his fertile brain to add something to the wonderful achievements of man by digging deeper into the store house of nature. And the statesman with equal pride, courage and energy studies the lives of great men, molding himself if possible into the characters that have won honor and fame. The political economy of nations is weighed in his mind and as years add wisdom he applies the motto "What Has Been Will Be" and seeks to legislate in harmony with the great cardinal principles of progressive and successful government.

Thus we find in the aggregation of education, in its varied avenues, fostered by a wise and liberal constitution, that it becomes and is the anchor of this mighty and glorious Republic, whose flag will ever wave over the land of the free and home of the brave.

Charlie Stagnitz, serving a twenty-year sentence at Waupun for killing Sol Felch, near Florence, has constructed a tiny facsimile of a full-rigged ship standing out to sea, with a miniature light-house upon a high bluff in the background, all of which is encased in a small pint bottle, every part of the vessel, light-house, rocky reefs and material which represents the water, having been inserted through the small neck of the bottle and then put into place.

A peculiar accident happened at the Clayton mill Saturday night. The sawyer, Frank Vetter, heard the band saw crack and reached down with a file to detect the extent of the break. Just as his left hand neared the saw it parted and severed the hand near the wrist. The shock was so great to his system that he hardly realized the extent of his injury for some time. He was brought to Dr. McIndoe's office where an amputation was made above the wrist and he is now doing well. Mr. Vetter is a man of family who can ill afford the bad luck which has befallen him.

Oshkosh Times: Side Tracked, a new railroad melodrama, was played at the Grand last evening to a packed house and it was presented in a manner that gave general satisfaction. It is an amusing and interesting play and its incidents are put together with considerable skill. Jule Walters makes a capable star, and his support is entirely satisfactory. The very large audience that crowded the Grand Opera House to its utmost capacity last evening seemed thoroughly pleased with the play and the actors, and applause was frequent and prolonged.

Geo. C. Harney, a prominent man at Woodruff, a small lumber town near here, has evidently tired of life. Monday evening he told his wife he would go over to the depot for a moment and has not yet returned. He came to Rhinelander on the midnight train went to a hotel and wrote his wife that he was tired of the constant strife for a livelihood; that his debts were more than he could ever recover from, and that a firm determination to end his troubles had taken possession of him. In the letter he described a proposed jump into the Wisconsin river, and gave the probable location where the body would be found. The last seen of him was about 4 o'clock Tuesday morning going towards the river. If he jumped from the bridge he indicated in his letter, the body may not be found for some days, as the current is likely to take it down stream for miles. When Mrs. Harney received the letter she telegraphed the chief of police here to search the river. It has been done, but no trace of the body discovered. A number of men from Woodruff are now searching below here, but the likelihood of finding a body in a stream full of rocks and saw logs is very poor indeed. Mr. Harney is a lumber manufacturer, being a member of the firm of Glendinning & Harney who operate a saw mill. The firm has been doing but little this season and their non-success has probably driven Harney to this rash act. He was formerly in business at Waupun and his mother, a wealthy woman, resides at Schofield, Wis.—Evening Wisconsin.

The Record Still Unbroken.

The Supreme Court handed down two decisions Wednesday which are of interest to our citizens, viz: G. C. Hixon et al. vs. Oneida county et al. W. A. Scatter et al. vs. Oneida county et al.

These actions were commenced to set aside taxes levied on plaintiff's lands in Eagle River, amounting in all to nearly $5,000. The actions were tried in Brown county on change of venue December 1890. Judge Hastings held that the lands were lawfully assessed, and that there were no irregularities which affected the justice of the tax, or charged plaintiffs with more than their just proportion of the tax. But also held that two items of the tax levy were illegal because illegally levied. The plaintiffs by Curtis & Curtis, their attorneys, appealed from the judgments sustaining the assessment. The defendant by Levi J. Billings its attorney, appealed from that part of the judgments holding the two items of levy illegal, which had the effect to void these two items of tax and the tax sale.

The Supreme court reverses the circuit court on defendant's appeal and remands the cases with directions to the circuit court to dismiss the plaintiff's complaints, thus sustaining the whole tax.

RHINELANDER STEAM LAUNDRY.

Hercules, the Iron Horse.

A mammoth highway locomotive that darts hither and thither through the streets, running as easily on the roughest road as the finest passenger engine glides along its tracks of steel is one of the striking features of the gorgeous street procession that precedes the exhibition of the Ringling Brothers' World's Greatest Shows, which will be seen at Rhinelander, Thursday, June 30. This remarkable mechanical wonder is utilized to draw one of the many sections of the all-featured street parade that has invariably proved so popular a feature with this great tent exposition. Its colossal weight and tremendous power has caused it to be fittingly named "Hercules," and nothing more awe-inspiring than this mammoth engine in motion could be imagined. Under the skillful hand of its engineer it moves and breathes like a living thing, responding to the master-touch with the quickness of human thought and the precision of a cultivated intelligence. As it moves, its great steam-pipe organ thunders out ringing melodies that can be heard miles and miles away, proclaiming to all that the great procession is actually in motion, and that Ringling Day is at last inaugurated. Nothing so impressive as "Hercules" has ever before been exhibited free upon the streets of any city, and nowhere save with the Ringling Brothers' circus can it be seen.

Vernon Brothers, the Marvelous Aerialists.

The Vernon Brothers, who have been secured as one of this season's many features with the Ringling Brothers' World's Greatest Shows, are unquestionably the highest salaried gymnasts that have ever been brought to this country. In Europe they stand pre-eminent at the head of all competitors and are justly styled the "flying kings of the air." No other aerialists have ever attempted the perilous feats that these marvelously clever performers accomplish with the greatest apparent ease. Swinging aloft in the topmost dome of the enormous circus and hippodrome tent, and darting from swing to swing with the rapidity of a shot from a cannon, they present a magnificent exhibition of daring and trained agility startling in its intrepidity. Their triple somer-saits, turned in mid-air while springing from trapezobars swinging forty feet apart, is the most thrilling act of its kind ever seen in this or any other country. These famous aerialists receive more money per week than has ever been paid any two gymnastic acts hitherto presented in this country, and never fail to create a sensation. Nowhere outside the Ringling Brothers' World's Greatest
Shows can such an act be witnessed.
This great exhibition will be seen at Rhinelander, Thursday, June 30.

It is useless to save your Lappen sells twenty times

WISCONSIN STATE NEWS.

THE ODD FELLOWS.

The Grand Lodge and the Daughters of Rebekah Elect Officers.

Wisconsin's grand lodge of odd fellows in session at Janesville elected officers as follows: Grand master, F. M. Griswold, Lake Mills; deputy grand master, J. L. Joergeson, Green Bay; grand warden, J. W. Watson, Fond du Lac; grand secretary, Richardson Hoe, Jefferson; grand treasurer, David Adler, Milwaukee; grand chaplain, W. J. Fisher, Horicon; grand representative, H. E. Dickinson, Milwaukee; trustee, John Bentley, Milwaukee. The Wisconsin association of Daughters of Rebekah also elected officers as follows: President, Mrs. H. M. Smith, Sparta; vice president, Mrs. Sarah E. Hutchinson, Green Bay; secretary, Mrs. Eliza McFarlane, Eau Claire; treasurer, Mrs. Anna Telford, Ashland.

Will Have a State Fair.

There will be a state fair this year and it will be held in Milwaukee. The $20,000 needed by the agricultural society to complete the buildings on the new grounds has been raised, and the committee on buildings announce that the fair will be held. The total expenses of putting the new fair grounds in shape will be about $85,000. The agricultural society has $40,000, which with the $20,000 just subscribed by the citizens of Milwaukee leaves about $25,000 to be yet raised. This is needed for the grand stand.

Found in a Cistern.

The sensation caused throughout Rock county a few weeks ago by an assault upon the wife of Daniel Stone, a wealthy farmer in the town of Fulton, who has been blind for forty years, is revived by finding the body of Mrs. Stone in a cistern. A post-mortem showed no water in either the lungs or stomach. Whether she came to her death by suicide or violent means was to be investigated by a coroner's jury.

He Wanted to Die.

Peter Larson Ennsrud, a man 65 years old and a bachelor, living a mile east of Stoughton, attempted suicide by cutting his throat. The instrument he used was a rusty piece of old iron, a part of a corn-chopper, and he made such a poor job of it that the doctors think he will ultimately recover. It will be several weeks before he can be removed to Mendota asylum, where it has been decided to send him.

Abducted a Girl.

Two weeks ago Signor Declair, a street fakir, abducted a handsome young lady named Lillian Fielding from her home in Ashland. The couple reached Marshalltown, Ia., where the police, having been notified to look out for them, shadowed the pair, but Declair escaped from town. The girl was taken charge of, and upon the arrival of funds from her parents at Ashland left for her home.

Death in a Wreck.

Awashout attributed to a cloudburst caused the wreck of a freight train on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road near Hartford, and resulted in the death of B. F. Fahl, engineer; George Rood, fireman, and James Roush, brakeman. The engine went through a culvert and into a pit about 15 feet below. The engineer, fireman and brakeman were in the cab and were instantly killed.

A PLAUSIBLE THEORY.

Human Feet Evidently Made for Tree Climbing.

The Sole of a New-Born Baby's Foot Shows This Clearly—Other Facts in Support of the Claim—Foot of an Infant.

In the Nineteenth Century Dr. Louis Robinson, in an article on "The Meaning of a Baby's Footprint," says: "If we were to endeavor to prove design from the study of the various parts of the elaborate machinery of bones, muscles and tendons revealed by dissection, our investigations might well end in a conclusion that some sort of design was indicated, but it would be design which plainly had in view the purpose of climbing trees rather than of walking or running on terra firma."

It is probable, it appears, that scientific investigators of the dim future will conclude from the structure of the human foot that the man of the present epoch lived among the branches of trees, though well able to progress on the ground.

While the bones of the foot and their arrangement indicate a fitness to bear weight from above, the muscles and tendons entirely bear out the view that men were designed for tree life. These could not, it is said, have been made for anything but arboreal climbing, as many of them are unnecessary for terrestrial motion, and nature does nothing that is unnecessary. This, of course, is only another proof that we are related to the great apes. Horses, camels, and other non-arboreal animals, most of which are hoofed, have feet of a robust mechanism, without fine tendinous cords and small muscles, such as those of men and the arboreal quadrumanous possess. The bulk of the apes, as would that of men, renders necessary a different apparatus from that which enables a cat to run up a tree.

In respect of feet a new-born child exhibits many more points of resemblance to the quadrumanous than the adult human being. An accompanying illustration shows the sole of such a foot covered with lines nearly identical to those of the hand. When the toes are bent downward these become deep creases, which goes to prove that they are the places where the skin folds to facilitate the act of grasping.

The toes are much more mobile than those of adults. The four outer toes can be bent downward so as to show a distinct knuckle. The great toe can be turned inward across the sole, and the

THE ITALIAN MINISTER.

Some of the Peculiarities and Whims of Baron Fava.

Baron Fava, the Italian minister to Washington, is not an ideal statesman, but in one way and another he has managed to keep himself before the people of Italy and to secure and hold excellent public positions. Ten or fifteen years ago he was a rich Italian nobleman, with vast estates, a large income, and a handsome wife, to whom the estate belonged. His violent temper eventually caused his wife to separate from him, taking the property with her, and leaving the baron nothing but his salary. He seems to be an unlucky in financial matters as he is impetuous in temper. He speculated in real estate and lost; and in Wall street he was always on the wrong side of the market. Fava is something of a dude; is very fond of society, of horses and fine equipages, although too poor to possess any. During his absence he was promoted to the rank of ambassador, and will probably be called to fill a vacancy expected to occur very soon at one of the courts where Italy sends diplomatic representatives of that rank.

A Monkey's Limit.

The monkey's intelligence has never been able to arrive at a point which enables that animal to achieve the untiring of a knot. You may tie a monkey with a cord, fasten with the simplest form of common knot, and unless the beast can break the string or gnaw it in two he will never get loose. To untie the knot requires observation and reasoning power, and, though a monkey may possess both, he has neither in a sufficient degree to enable him to overcome the difficulty.

Peculiarly Affected.

One family in Utica is peculiarly affected. They have hay fever in the house six months of every year, says the Utica Observer. When the trees bud the wife comes down with it, and for two months wheezes, sneezes and coughs night and day. At the end of the two months she lends the disease to her husband, who keeps it until the grass is ripe and haying begins, at which time he transmits it to his sister, who is also a member of the family. For two or three years the family has been regularly visited by the disease, and now the coming of summer is hailed with anything but pleasure, for it brings misery with it.

COLUMBIAN TOWER.

The Grand Structure Planned by Some Enterprising Chicagoans.

A Chicago firm is preparing the plans for a mammoth observation tower to be named the Columbian, which a stock company, soon to be organized, proposes erecting near the world's fair grounds. Including the site the total cost of construction is estimated at not less than $5,000,000. By working day and night shifts the tower, it is believed, can be completed in six months.

The tower is to be constructed of steel and iron, 500 feet in diameter at the base and 220 at the cornice line. The form is to be circular and 1,493 feet high to the base of the statue of Columbus, which will be about 50 feet high, making a total height of 1,543 feet. The statue will stand on a globe or sphere some 52 feet in diameter. The central tower shaft column is 275 feet at the ground line, diminishing in size as it rises, until at 1,200 feet it will be 220 feet in diameter. Here the shaft is capped with a heavy cornice which girds the entire shaft. From this cornice springs the roof of the tower, which rises about 120 feet and is crowned with a balcony. The globe will be lighted at night with powerful electric lights and reflectors.

Around the central shaft of the tower will be located a double-track electric railroad, passing around the tower at a 3 per cent. grade until it reaches the height of 1,300 feet. The entire length of the railroad will be about seven miles to the terminus. On one of the inner sections of the central shaft, inside the railroad, will be an inclined sidewalk rising the same grade as the railroad. Inside of this walk will be refreshment booths the entire distance. In the inside section of the tower will be placed eight elevators. Four hotels, on each corner of the grand square, seven stories in height, with a total of 3,000 rooms, will be placed. In the space between these hotels, on the four sides of the building, will be located ballrooms, bazars, entertainment halls, music halls, billiard halls, bowling alleys and dining halls. There will also be, in connection with the hotels, a large opera house.

Located on the roofs of these buildings and on the roofs of the hotels will be hanging gardens. Above these gardens will be two grand promenades, forming the base of the tower. And over these promenades will be four balconies, running around the shaft of the tower. The first will be 40 feet wide and 200 feet high. The second 300 feet high and 30 feet wide. The third 400 feet high and 20 feet wide. The fourth 500 feet high and 12 feet wide. Facilities for 100,000 people visiting the top of the tower in a single day will be provided.
